

Uy Tín

Tôi xin chia sẻ bài “Uy Tín” của đứa con gái 11 tuổi của tôi. Bài viết này tuy đơn sơ nhưng lời lẽ lại mang đến cho tôi nhiều suy nghĩ về tinh thần trách nhiệm của mình.

Câu chuyện ngắn này dạy tôi không nên nói dối. Như người trong câu chuyện này, khi anh ta đã nói sự thật, không có ai tới giúp.

One time, there was a person who was the youngest in his family. His parents passed away when he was young, and his uncle took care of him. He (the child) had a bad habit of lying. One time, he cried out: “My house is burning!” His neighbors came, but they didn’t see any fire; there was just burning rice in the cooking pot. After a while, when the man’s house really was on fire, no one came. His house was burnt to the ground, and what left were the ashes of his house.

This story teaches us to not lie to one another. Like the man in the story, he lied to others (which were the neighbors). When he was telling the truth, no one came. The reason no one came is because no one trusted him. If the man in story was honest, people would come and handle the problem. Honesty is also important in your life. If you have a job and you lie to your boss, you will get laid off and you will not make any money. When this happens, you lose your home, money, and you will become a hobo on the streets, begging for money. See, you need the money to live in this environment. Plus, when you get an F, and you do not want to show your parents, when they find out, you're going to get punished. If you do not want that to happen, might as well stop lying (if you're dishonest). Also, a word "uy tín" means "honesty".

I learned from the story above that people would rather believe an honest man than a dishonest one.
